Looking for a more recent version of Office?An Israeli man was sentenced to 30 days' imprisonment on Tuesday, after he used his smartphone to record video of a sexual assault in an Egged bus in Jerusalem. The man, an American citizen, filmed the assault on his mobile phone with the camera set on automatic, and turned in the phone to police after the incident. JTA reported that the court sentence "promises that the man, who has been detained for deportation to the United States, will not be transferred to prison. He will begin his sentence on May 6, and will be required to pay bail of NIS 5,000 ($1,399)." The attack took place in February, and involved two Egged bus passengers accusing a young woman of sitting in their seats. When she refused to move, a 29-year-old passenger exposed himself and slapped her, causing her to scream, officials said. The 29-year-old was arrested in March. In an effort to prevent similar incidents, Israeli police have been issuing an operator's warning to the public about the ban on filming in public buses. The warning was published on the Egged bus website, and available in six languages: Hebrew, Arabic, English, Russian, Polish, and Spanish. It states: "In the framework of the public order, and for reasons of safety of people and vehicles,
